HARVEST CONDITIONS

The 2024 vintage is considered a cold and late season in Colchagua. The winter was mild and very wet, with 76% more rain than the historical data, with 1.008 mm of rain during the season, concentrated between June and August. Since 2006 that we did not recorded such level of rains in Apalta. The temperatures over the winter where mild, in particular with higher minima all over the season. These conditions carried over to the beginning of the spring, with mostly cooler and overcast days, but soon higher temperatures and sunny days became more regular. No heat waves or frosts where recorded. The growth was slow as well trough the end of the summer, and the season was finally late between 10 to 15 days depending on the variety. As the maturity arrived slowly, it was also uneven. We had to follow a very close selection of all our vineyard blocks and have a lot of patience to wait for when the maturity was there. The yields ended up being 10% lower than our predictions, but most importantly with grapes of excellent quality. The wines show great depth, with elegance and great fruit expression, and remarcable acidity and ageing potential.
